

Presents He Brought

One October day in 2014, the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un visited the newly-built Wisong Scientists Residential District.

When he entered a flat, he sat on the sofa in the drawing room, saying that he had brought TV sets, quilts and kitchen utensils with him as he came to the district.

As the officials grew excited at his ever-increasing affection for the scientists, he said with a broad smile on his face that the scientists' wives would feel happier with the sets of utensils.

Seeing the TV table in the room, he asked officials to install a TV set on it. When the officials had installed it, he said that the set was of the Arirang brand made in our country and that it was more significant to give our scientists indigenous TV sets than giving them those made in other countries.

Then he asked the officials to bring the quilts in as well, and told the senior official of the State Academy of Sciences that he had brought them to the householder who would live there, but as the householder was not around, he should convey them to the householder in a responsible manner.