

The Last Day of Great Life

The following happened on July 7, 1994.

In the morning President Kim Il Sung went over a document related to the work of a unit and ratified it. In the evening he continued his work, even skipping his dinner.

When an official earnestly asked him to have dinner, he said he had no idea of having meals, and kept working energetically.

After a while, when the official asked him once again, he said: Thank you for your concern. I have a lot of things to do for the good of our people. I cannot have a rest whenever I am told that Comrade Kim Jong Il burns midnight oil, working for the sake of our people.

Though the night advanced, Kim Il Sung in his eighties continued his work devotedly, going over documents for the betterment of the people's living, making phone calls, and going over documents again.

That was the last day of his great life.