

Table Moved

One October day in 2014, the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un visited the completed Yonphung Scientists Holiday Camp.

After exchanging greetings with the local officials, he commented that the holiday camp looked like a picture when he saw it aboard a boat.

He continued to say: A wonderful fairyland, which I dreamed of, has been materialized. I am very pleased that this area has been transformed beyond recognition in a short span of time.

He then made the rounds of several places, such as general service centre, building for holidaymakers, resting place, walkways and multi-purpose outdoor playground, in order to learn in detail about the construction.

On the second floor of the general service centre he saw a table for table tennis and other recreational equipment.

After looking carefully at them, he said it would not be appropriate to put the table in the hall.

The officials could not understand why.

Pointing to the hall through the staircase, he said who would bring back a table-tennis ball if it rolled down to the first floor during the game.

The officials were deeply moved by his meticulous attention to details.

Actually, none of them had ever thought about this simple matter.

They felt guilty for not caring about such details, and realized once again that Kim Jong Un considered everything in the interests of the people.

Later, the table was moved.

This episode reminds officials that if they are to give top and absolute priority to the interests and convenience of the people, they should approach everything from the standpoint of the people.
