

With Our Own Resources and Our Own Technology

One August day in 2014, the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un visited the Chollima Tile Factory.

He was guided into an indoor exhibition hall where ceramic roofing tiles and other products were displayed on the walls according to kind, size and colour.

Giving a look around them, he said to officials: I am happy to see the tiles for outer and inner walls and floor, as well as roofing tiles. It is very good that the factory can produce these good-quality building materials with our own resources and our own technology. I am really pleased to see these all.

Listening to what he had to say, the officials recollected how the factory had developed thanks to his close concern.

Kim Jong Un continued: We should rely on our own resources and our own technology to produce building materials. Likewise, in implementing construction projects, we should value our own things and encourage the use of our own building materials. Only then can we carry out the projects and develop our building-materials industry without depending on other countries.

The officials became convinced once again that they should value the country's resources and technology to develop its building-materials industry and steadily usher in the golden age of construction.
