

Stressing Importance of Self-Development

One October day in 2013, the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un visited the newly-built Central Mushroom Institute.

While looking round the institute, he was told about modern equipment developed by scientists and technicians of the State Academy of Sciences.

Satisfied with it, he made his way to the equipment.

Actually, the scientists and technicians had suffered many obstacles when they buckled down to the work.

But, keeping in mind that it was their duty and obligation they have assumed before the Party and the country to develop cutting-edge equipment in reliance on their own efforts, technology and resources, they developed this equipment better than that of other country.

After learning in detail about its technical specifications, Kim Jong Un said: How laudable it is that they have developed such cutting-edge equipment by themselves. I am delighted to see the Central Mushroom Institute that has been built in a modern fashion, and I am more pleased to see that our scientists and technicians are working hard to implement the Party's instructions on getting rid of the proclivity to import. As I have always stressed, it is meaningless to develop science and technology so as to import machines and assemble them.
