

At the January 8 Fishery Station

One November day in 2016, the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un visited the January 8 Fishery Station, which landed a big haul of fish.

For a long time he looked round one freezing storehouse after another, all filled with frozen fish blocks. Then, with a smile on his face, he looked at the compound of the modernly-equipped station and a mountain of fish in the wide unloading area of the wharf. Greatly satisfied, he posed for a photo with the officials and employees of the station and their family members.

Before taking his leave, he said to the manager of the station: As the manager of the January 8 Fishery Station, you shoulder a heavy responsibility. You should not rest on your laurels but work to fulfil your responsibility by studying hard to acquire more knowledge about the fishing industry and invent new fishing methods.

Without learning modern science and technology, an official cannot keep up with the ever-developing reality, nor can he fulfil his responsibility and duty at the post entrusted by the Party.

Listening to what Comrade Kim Jong Un had to say, officials of the station realized that they should focus on putting the fishing work on a scientific footing and applying advanced fishing methods so as to supply more tasty and fresh fish to the children in orphanages and the elderly in old people's homes.

They became fully aware of the importance of science and technology.
